Why isn't my professor Pasifika or Māori?

From Nine To Noon, 9:09 am on 29 August 2019

Share this

The numbers of Māori and Pasifika working at New Zealand universities remains stubbornly low, despite attempts by the eight institutions to increase diversity. According to new research Māori academics make up roughly 5 percent of the workforce, while Pasifika academics make up 1.7 percent.

Questions for the panel

1. How do you create a welcoming/cultural inclusive environment for all students while also remaining mindful of our unique cultural context in Aotearoa?
2. What do you take into consideration when engaging with Māori learners? Any particular strategies you use to acknowledge the Treaty of Waitangi and the principles that emanate from it?
3. What resources do you/have you drawn on to incorporate Māori relevant curriculum (if any)?
4. Any other learning experiences you want to share with colleagues?

Ko Pukekohe te maunga te rū nei taku ngākau.
(Pukehohe is the mountain that speaks to my heart.)

Ko Wairoa te awa e mahea nei aku māharahara.
(Wairoa is the river that alleviates my worries.)

E mihi ana ki ngā tohu o nehe, o Hunua e noho nei au.
(I recognise the ancestral and spiritual landmarks of Hunua where I live.)

Ko Chris Woods tōku ingoa.
(My name is Chris Woods)

University and the Treaty of Waitangi | Te Tiriti o Waitangi

The Treaty of Waitangi is New Zealand's founding document and the University is committed to the rights and obligations articulated in the Treaty.

The University places particular emphasis on promoting Māori presence and participation in all aspects of University life and encouraging teaching, learning and research in a range of fields important to Māori.

The University offers all general and academic staff the opportunity to learn about the Treaty to broaden their understanding of its role in our present and future.

The University of Auckland Equity Cycle

www.equity.auckland.ac.nz

The University of Auckland makes a difference to achieving equity outcomes for students and staff at our University and for people throughout New Zealand. We do this by contributing at each of the following stages of the Equity Cycle through our research, teaching and learning.

The Business School has three main activities to improve participation and achievement of Pacific learners:

Academic support provided to all Māori and Pacific students via Tuākana and cohorts at stage one.

He Tuākana is a tutorial and mentoring programme for undergraduate and postgraduate Māori and Pacific students at the Business School. Please visit the website to learn more

<https://www.auckland.ac.nz/en/business/study-with-us/maori-and-pacific/he-tuakana.html>

Contacts are:

Genezy `Ilolahia – Tuākana Coordinator - g.ilolahia@auckland.ac.nz

- Ella Lyon – ella.lyon@auckland.ac.nz
- Lisa Filitonga – l.filitonga@auckland.ac.nz
- Willie Uili – w.uili@auckland.ac.nz

Networking and social events are also run to supplement and/or align with the support provided by the Student Academic and Student Development teams.
