The Centre for Asia Pacific Refugee Studies aims to respond to contemporary challenges of conflict and climate induced displacement. The scholarship is intended to support academic engagement contributing to positive change, inclusion and social cohesion with displaced peoples and communities. Specific areas of interest for the team include:

- Domestic and family violence protection and prevention
- Mental health and trauma recovery
- Child and youth wellbeing
- Aging and older peoples

We aim to cultivate a collective of doctoral students progressing collaborative inquiries with under-researched populations. Ideally, the successful candidate will support and develop capacity building expertise and research skills within communities. These aspirations align with wider policy and practice shifts towards community service delivery such as Oranga Tamariki's Mana Ōrite.
